This is the first book in a series from an exciting author. Eve Miller is an experienced classroom teacher and now a keen author.

This book is a response to a direct request from teachers for suitable learning materials for this cohort of students.

It comes with free audio files, interactive software and powerpoint displays (and open office equivalents) to help teachers teach and children to learn.

This book puts this cohort of students in a position where they have to make inferences from the information given. It is something that a number of students find incredibly difficult and need experience of, in order to acquire this essential life skill. The book comes with audio files, powerpoint slide shows for the teacher and equivalent open source software, ensuring no teacher is disadvantaged for not having the software. This is a value laden book that will support teachers in their work and help students to learn. This is the first in a series of 4 books written for Lawler Education by the same author.

The series is:

- Writing in Everyday Life 1 Making inferences,
- Writing in Everyday Life 2 Travelling,
- Writing in Everyday Life 3 Asking questions,
- Writing in Everyday Life 4 Messages.

The work in this book covers basic skills but it is written in an adult context.
